

Flurry of talks precedes pullback

By DAVID LANDAU
Post Diplomatic Correspondent

While the army was to begin evacuating the anti-withdrawal diehards from Yamit this morning, the government was still maintaining a deliberate measure of uncertainty over its intention to complete the withdrawal from all of Sinai on Sunday as scheduled.

Highly placed sources said the negotiations with Egypt and with the U.S. over 11th-hour disputes were "in a delicate stage" last night. They said Israel was awaiting Egyptian Deputy Premier Kamal Hassan Ali's visit here today, and the results of U.S. aerial photography checking out the Sinai demilitarization, before the cabinet reconvenes on Wednesday to take the final decision on the withdrawal.

Accompanying Ali to Israel today will be his Minister of State for Foreign Affairs Butros Ghali. Israel's Ambassador to Cairo, Moshe Sasson, is also expected.

At the weekly cabinet meeting yesterday, Premier Menachem Begin told the ministers they would reconvene on Wednesday evening, "when all the information is before us, to decide what — if anything — we shall do on Sunday."

The premier and his top ministers and aides met with U.S. Under-Secretary of State Walter Stoessel for two hours in Jerusalem last night. Earlier in the day Stoessel conferred with President Hosni Mubarak in Cairo.

After his meeting with Begin, Stoessel — for the first time on this shuttle mission — omitted assuring newsmen of his confidence that the withdrawal would be completed as scheduled. Instead, he entered his car quickly and drove off.

Despite the apparent tension surrounding the talks, the firm expectation still is that Israel will withdraw as scheduled. With persistent and high-powered American involvement, formulae are likely to be worked out in the days ahead that will offer Jerusalem new reassurance as to both Cairo's and Washington's commitment to the Camp David framework beyond the Sinai pullout date.

And on the ground in Sinai, the alleged Egyptian infringements of the limitation-of-forces provisions are almost certain to be rectified to Israel's satisfaction — and to pass the verification tests of the U.S. Sinai Field Mission and the spy-plane photography.

The border dispute over Taba beach, near Eilat, is still unresolved — and there are understood to be some Israeli policy-makers who urge that the IDF should not withdraw from the disputed area on Sunday if Egypt does not accept Israel's proposal for an interim arrangement pending final settlement by arbitration.

Stoessel may continue shuttle

CAIRO (AP). — U.S. Deputy Secretary of State Walter Stoessel yesterday said Egypt has reassured him of "its firm adherence" to peace with Israel, but raised prospects that his trouble-shooting mission to the Middle East may require a further shuttle between Cairo and Jerusalem.

Concluding two days of talks here with a one-hour meeting with President Hosni Mubarak, Stoessel told reporters he was confident "existing problems will be overcome" in time for the Israeli withdrawal. But he said he would "probably be coming back to Cairo."

PLO admits smuggling arms into Gaza

Post Middle East Affairs Reporter and Agencies

A senior PLO official yesterday confirmed Israeli charges that his organization was smuggling arms from Egyptian-controlled Sinai to its members in Gaza.

In an interview published in the latest edition of the Beirut English-language weekly Monday Morning, PLO chief Yasser Arafat's top political aide, Hani al-Hassan, denied, however, that this was with Egypt's "connivance," as claimed by Israel.

Al-Hassan also warned that the PLO would be stepping up its operations against Israeli targets "to match the political escalation and civil disobedience" in the West Bank and Gaza.

He stressed, however, that such operations would not be mounted across the Lebanese border, in keeping with the PLO's interpretation of the cease-fire worked out in South Lebanon last July.

Israel claims that PLO action across any border violates the cease-fire.

agreement in Sinai.

A reconnaissance plane was due to photograph the area yesterday, but the results were not disclosed.

The flight was requested after Israel complained that Egypt had deployed more units and set up more fortifications in certain areas of Sinai than those permitted under the peace agreement.

Meanwhile an Egyptian source here yesterday said he believed the head of his country's military intelligence, identified only as General Abdallah, was still in Israel. The general, who arrived here on Friday, reportedly met the head of the IDF intelligence branch Aluf Yehoshua Saguy and other senior officers.

TEL AVIV. — A 58-year-old man from Bat Yam who once worked for Nava Elimelech's father, and who eight years ago was convicted of a sexual offense, is in custody in connection with the murder of the 11-year-old girl.

Tel Aviv Magistrate David Bar-Ofir remanded David Levy for five days. He was arrested in his Bat Yam apartment on Thursday.

The Tel Aviv police spokesman and Police Chief Avraham Turgeman's office cautioned against considering the case solved. They stressed that investigators have not yet determined that Levy

Begin, Sharir blast Cohn over 'barbarism' in Golan

By BENNY MORRIS
Post Diplomatic Reporter

Prime Minister Menachem Begin yesterday charged that former Supreme Court justice Haim Cohn "had not for the first time lost control of his tongue" when he said that Israel was implementing "the law of barbarians" in the Golan Heights against the local Druse population.

Cohn responded last night by saying he "deeply regretted that the prime minister did not see fit to respond to the point of the harsh accusations I saw fit to raise. As for the personal criticism, I have no answer. Out of respect for the prime minister, I prefer to be among the insulted than among the insulters."

Begin's charge followed an unprecedented verbal lashing of the retired justice by Tourism Minister Avraham Sharir, who declared that "Cohn supplied our enemies with weighty ammunition against us and defended the maligning of Israel."

It was at a press conference last Thursday that Cohn, a former deputy president of the Supreme Court and the current chairman of the Association for Civil Rights in Israel (ACRI), characterized the IDF's treatment of the Golan Druse as the implementation of "the law of barbarians" and detailed alleged "illegal" Israeli beatings, brutality and collective punishments meted out to the local population by the soldiers.

"Cohn has done Israel great harm," Sharir last night told The Jerusalem Post.

According to well-placed sources, at the cabinet meeting, Sharir said that Cohn's use of the term "barbarian" regarding Israeli behaviour was "unfortunate. If we are barbarian," argued Sharir, "then how would Cohn define the acts and regimes of Iraq and Syria, and events in Lebanon?"

Sharir told The Post that Cohn's words "required a firm and clear response — a response I had expected would come from the Ministry of Justice or the attorney-general's office. They remained tongue-tied." Sharir said that the IDF's rebuttal of Cohn's words, which was issued on Saturday, "was too late and only partially effective."

Following Sharir's attack on Cohn, Begin cited two instances in which he alleged that Cohn had in the past "lost control" — when Cohn was attorney-general in Moshe Sharet's government and proposed that Mandatory Emergency Regulations be applied against Orthodox rioters, including

Six Sinai Beduin detained, face possible deportation

By DAVID RICHARDSON
Jerusalem Post Reporter

Six Beduin from Sinai, who have been illegally living in Israel for several years, yesterday were detained by Negev police and are being held in the Beersheba lock-up pending possible deportation to Sinai. Several of the group have married local Beduin women and raised families.

A police spokesman confirmed last night that a police operation had picked up the six men, in a sweep of Beduin encampments in the Northern Negev. According to the spokesman, the initiative for the operation originated with the police, but it is now up to the Interior Ministry to decide whether to expel the six or grant them permits to reside in Israel.

According to sources familiar with the Beduin in the area, there are at least ten more cases of Beduin men, originally from the Sinai, having married local women who are facing possible deportation.

Yehudit Hubner, of the Interior Ministry, said last night that she had no knowledge of the affair.

The problem of the Sinai Beduin marrying local Beduin women is only one aspect of a problem confronting a number of Beduin from the Sinai — particularly the Rafiah region — who for various reasons do not want to live under Egyptian rule. In some cases the authorities have granted individuals permission to move into Israel proper.

IDF moves into Yamit on eve of evacuation

By JOSHUA BRILLIANT
and MOTTI BEN-YANAI
Jerusalem Post Reporters

YAMIT. — The IDF today is expected to tackle the toughest aspect of the evacuation of Sinai by evicting some 2,000 supporters of the anti-withdrawal movement who have barricaded themselves in this north Sinai town.

The operation's commander, O/C Southern Command Aluf Haim Erez said he expected the evacuation to last several days.

The IDF closed the area to reporters and ordered those in town to leave by this morning. Telephone connections were also cut by the authorities.

In preparing for the massive operation, which will reportedly begin at dawn, the army brought hundreds of men and women soldiers to the area and supplied commanders with aerial photos of the town.

It said it had devised ways to deal with especially tough groups, such as the 20-odd students led by MK

Goula Cohen's son, Tzahi Hanegbi, who have barricaded themselves at the top of a high memorial to soldiers who fell in the area during the Six Day War. Among the students is the son of area commander, Tal-Aluf Oded.

According to Erez, the troops will follow the procedures adopted in evacuating several agricultural settlements in the area. Soldiers and policemen will ask squatters to leave voluntarily. If they decline, the security forces will "help" them move. In previous operations squatters were led to waiting buses, as soldiers and policemen packed their belongings onto waiting trucks.

Erez indicated force will be used against those resisting eviction.

Apparently the army is concerned with the fact that children have been active in preventing workers from dismantling installations near Yamit. In an interview yesterday, Erez asked the members of the Movement to Stop the Withdrawal in Sinai to desist from "using children to interfere with the process of evacuation. It would be still better if they could be spared the sight," he added.

Asked how the army will handle people such as Kach leader Meir Kahane's disciples, who had threatened to commit suicide, Erez said: "We'll find a way to evacuate them in a way that (the worst) won't happen." He did not elaborate. Yesterday, chief army chaplain Aluf Gad Navon and Merkaz Harav Yeshiva head, Rabbi Avraham Shapira, failed in their efforts to persuade the Kach members to give up their resistance. There are a dozen men and three women in the Kach bunker.

Erez said the soldiers had been told that the impending evacuation "is not war and the evacuees are not enemies. All in all they're a good element in the nation. We'll do everything so that they won't get hurt and the IDF soldiers won't be hurt either," he stated.

The army will take special measures to prevent diehards from trying to infiltrate back into the area. A long double fence — against terrorist incursions — has been built between the Sinai desert and the Negev and will probably help prevent incursions into Yamit.

"We'll try to do everything possible so they will not return and will not have anywhere to return to," Erez declared. This suggests that buildings will be destroyed — but Erez did not say so explicitly.

Tension rose to fever pitch among the 20 remaining original Yamit families and their supporters as the troops poured into the town in dozens of buses and scores of other military vehicles including fire trucks, ambulances, field hospitals and cranes. The soldiers, including a large proportion of officers, mostly on training courses, were drawn from all branches of the IDF.

Yesterday evening the Movement to Stop the Withdrawal held an emergency meeting to plan their tactics. A force of some 200 children up to the age of 12 would be brought into operation to immobilize army vehicles by slashing tires and lying down in front of the vehicles, it was said.

The decision to evacuate the town was evidently taken at yesterday's cabinet meeting. Towards noon Defence Minister Ariel

Government's fate could hinge on Abuhatzzeira verdict today

TEL AVIV. — The verdict to be handed down this morning in the trial of Welfare Minister Aharon Abuhatzzeira may indirectly decide the fate of the government and whether Israel will go to the polls this November.

An acquittal would spare the government yet another burden on top of the defection of the National Religious Party's Rabbi Haim Druckman. Its majority would not be further eroded and it could concentrate its efforts on wooing Telem into the coalition and, at a later point, possibly co-opting Tehiya as well, or at least ensuring its support even if outside the coalition framework.

But should Abuhatzzeira be convicted, the government may be in very narrow straits. A law enacted after the conviction some years ago of Shmuel Reichtman makes resignation from the Knesset mandatory if a member is convicted of a felony and sent to prison for a year or more. However, a verdict of guilty today will certainly mean an appeal, and Tami sources told The Jerusalem Post that, in the meantime, while an appeal is pending, Abuhatzzeira should have the benefit of the doubt and hold on both to his Knesset seat and to his two Cabinet portfolios.

These same sources, however, told The Post that they are confident he would be acquitted and they are already planning mass celebrations in various parts of the country, including victory parades, geared in part to garner some political profit.

Should there be a conviction, the Prime Minister would be under immense public pressure to demand Abuhatzzeira's resignation from the government. That may well cost him Abuhatzzeira's loyalty in close Knesset votes, should he not resign from the Knesset.

If Abuhatzzeira does resign his Cabinet post, the two other Tami MKs, Aharon Uzan and Bezalel Rubin, both of whom serve as his deputies, may compete for his cabinet seat, possibly splitting the three-member faction, with one or two of its members ending up outside the coalition.

In such an eventuality, the Likud's already considerable desire to advance the election date would become an overriding necessity, and sources in the Likud as well as in the Prime Minister's Office told The Jerusalem Post that they believe they would be able to muster the necessary Knesset majority to dissolve the House and hold elections early in November, coinciding with the municipal polls.

Thus far, the Likud, whose prospects appear bright according to public opinion polls, is the only faction that has been eager for early elections. Its coalition partners, most notably the National Religious Party, wish to avoid them. The polls do not augur well for the NRP, but there are hints that it and Aguda have promised the Likud that should the government fall in a no-confidence vote, they would not support an alternative Alignment coalition, but would vote for a Likud early elections bill.

The Likud's greatest hope, however, is that the Alignment would be bound to support such a bill now that its chairman, Shimon Peres, has told TV that he is ready to face early elections. It is thought in Labour that Peres would prefer early elections to safeguard his own position in his party. If elections were to be held soon, he could argue that it is not wise to change the party leader prior to polling day. However, if the government carries on, time would work against Peres and he would be sure to face new challenges to his position.

Crowds expected for Abuhatzzeira verdict

TEL AVIV. — Judge Victoria Ostrovsky-Cohen's district courtroom will be packed this morning for the verdict in the trial of Minister of Labour, Social Affairs and Absorption Aharon Abuhatzzeira, and his former aide, Moshe Gabai.

Police will be on hand to keep order, as supporters and relatives of the men are expected to flock to the courthouse, hoping for a repeat of Abuhatzzeira's acquittal last May at his first trial for bribe-taking.

Abuhatzzeira and Gabai are accused of larceny, aggravated fraud, breach of trust, and conspiracy to commit a crime in connection with the Ramle-based Rabbi Yitzhak Abuhatzzeira charity.

No-Smoking Day observed

By ISRAEL AMRANI and YITZHAK OKED, Jerusalem Post Reporters
How many smokers became non-smokers during yesterday's observance of No-Smoking Day in Israel is not known. However, continued assistance in breaking the habit is available from both the Tel Aviv police and the Education Ministry, which announced plans for curbing smoking.

Tel Aviv police will more strictly enforce the law prohibiting smoking in city buses and in the front half of intercity buses. The law sets the fine at IS300 for the offence.

Hundreds of volunteers in Tel Aviv yesterday handed out information about the health dangers of smoking, along with dummy citations to persons caught smoking illegally in buses.

Recognizing that many smokers begin the habit while in high school, Education Minister Zevulun Hammer yesterday reminded teachers of the law prohibiting them from smoking in schools in front of their students. He said teachers must set a good example to their students regarding smoking, as both teachers and parents have a strong influence on teenagers.

The Education Ministry also announced that its chief scientist is considering a study on the motives that drive youngsters to smoke, and the reasons people continue to smoke.

No-Smoking Day was sponsored by the Israel Cancer Association and had the cooperation of the Education Ministry and the Transport Ministry.

Begin favours Jerusalem Day amnesty

By BENNY MORRIS
Post Diplomatic Reporter

Prime Minister Menachem Begin suggested at yesterday's cabinet meeting that the government consider releasing a number of convicts from prison in a mass pardon to mark the 15th anniversary of the unification of Jerusalem, a source reported.

The cabinet referred the suggestion to Justice Minister Moshe Nisim and Attorney-General Yitzhak Zamir.

Nisim and Zamir will consider the various aspects of the idea and submit an opinion to the cabinet, possibly by next Sunday.

A senior government source last night said a mass pardon was implemented almost 15 years ago to mark the Israeli victory in the Six Day War.

"We must check what categories of criminals the pardon will apply to," a source said. "It is taken on the matter," the source said. "We must check on cases of recidivism among those released in the last pardon, and there are various other aspects to the problem."

IDF TO YAMIT

Sharon summoned Erez to Jerusalem to a meeting attended by Chief of Staff Rav-Aluf Rafael Eitan, where instructions were given.

Military sources said yesterday that reporters have been barred from Yamit in the hope that anti-withdrawal movement members will put up less resistance if they see no cameras around. "Everybody agrees the presence of journalists and TV crews arouses people. They do everything before cameras...if TV cameras are around, there will be murder," an officer claimed.

The National Federation of Israeli Journalists and the Foreign Press Association last night sharply criticized the decision to bar journalists from Yamit, and called on the government to allow free reporting of the events in the area.

The chairman of the Committee of Editors of the Daily Newspapers, Marek Gefen, also condemned the decision, saying it contravened an agreement with the government and was an unprecedented blow to the freedom of the press. The editors committee meets this morning to discuss the issue.

Haifa man fined for not moving his ass

HAIFA (Itim). — A man whose donkey stopped dead on the tracks was found guilty yesterday of a traffic violation — unauthorized delay of a railroad train — and fined IS50 by the magistrates court here.

Muhammad Hussein Abu, 41, of Haifa, was riding his donkey near the railroad tracks one day last October and wanted to cross to the other side. But the animal stopped in the middle of the tracks and refused to move. Just as a train was bearing down on them, Abu leaped from the donkey's back and saved himself. But the stubborn donkey was killed on the spot and the train was forced to stop while the carcass was cleared from the tracks.

Abu asked the court for mercy at yesterday's hearing, noting that the donkey had been his only source of income. But he was nevertheless convicted of a traffic violation and given a choice of a IS50 fine or five days in jail.

Iraq may ask sanctions for Syria's closing of pipeline

Post Middle East Affairs Reporter

Iraq has indicated that it may seek Arab sanctions against Syria in retaliation for its closure earlier this month of the pipeline that carries Iraqi oil across Syrian territory to the Mediterranean.

"When one Arab League member state takes such action against another, sanctions should be imposed, including a boycott," Iraqi Oil Minister Tayeh Abdel Karim is quoted as saying in the latest issue of the Cyprus-based weekly Middle East Economic Survey.

Karim is quoted as saying that Iraq would call on "our sister Arab states and particularly Saudi Arabia and other oil-producing states in the Gulf to take decisive action on this matter."

Kuwait Minister of State for Cabinet Affairs Abdel-Aziz Hussein

yesterday dismissed newspaper reports that Kuwait was contemplating cutting aid to Syria. Damascus receives $1.8 billion annually from Kuwait and other Arab oil producers under a 1978 Arab summit resolution.

But there were reports in the Kuwaiti press yesterday that Kuwait and the other Gulf states, which have aided Iraq in its war with Iran with billions of dollars over the past 18 months, are considering more aid for Iraq following Syria's closure of the pipeline.

Karim's interview was published a day after Syria's Deputy Prime Minister Walid Hamdoun ruled out any reconciliation with neighbouring Iraq.

Kach lawyer takes over Goodman case

By ISRAEL AMRANI
Jerusalem Post Reporter

Ronnie Bar-On, the attorney appointed by the court last week to defend Alan Goodman in the Temple Mount shooting case, yesterday filed a complaint with the Israel Bar Association alleging that attorney Liorit Daniel had used unethical means to displace him from the case.

Daniel, who has handled cases for Rabbi Meir Kahane's Kach movement, was sent by Kach to visit Goodman in his cell and there persuaded him to sign a form empowering her to represent him.

In Jerusalem Magistrates Court yesterday, Daniel formally agreed to represent Goodman in Bar-On's stead, and Magistrate Hanan Shelah, who had originally appointed Bar-On, agreed to the switch.

Bar-On yesterday told the court that such a change should never have been made, and accused the Kach movement of exploiting "a very confused and susceptible man" for its own political ends.

The line of defence now will switch from a criminal defence to a political show trial, Bar-On said yesterday. Referring to Kach, he said: "They don't care about Goodman at all. They are sacrificing him for their own purposes."

Kach yesterday announced that its central argument for the defence will be that "since the Temple Mount is first and foremost a Jewish holy place, Arabs have no right to tread there. And if they had not been there in the first place, the shooting incident never would have occurred."

Youth shot after stonings in Bethlehem area village

By DAVID RICHARDSON
Jerusalem Post Reporter

A 16-year-old boy was shot in the shoulder yesterday from an Israeli car as it passed through the village of Housan in the Bethlehem area. Earlier in the day youths had stoned several cars as they passed by there and soldiers were called in to disperse them.

Disturbances were reported from several parts of the West Bank yesterday although the unrest has generally quieted. Most schools and businesses re-opened following the week-long strike prompted by last week's shooting attack on the Temple Mount.

Three members of the Supreme Council of the Natorei Karta met yesterday with leaders of the Supreme Moslem Council in East Jerusalem to express their "anguish" over the Temple Mount incident.

Curfews and other restrictions on movement continue in the Dehshieh refugee camp for the ninth day, the Jezazoun refugee camp, Azariya outside Jerusalem, El Arub, Halhoul, Dahariya and parts of El-Birch.

In Nablus the car of the Israeli-appointed mayor Rav-Seren Nir Tsoref was reportedly stoned, and a border policeman was struck by a stone in Jenin. Students from the al-Nabiah College in Nablus reportedly demonstrated.

Residents of the Balata refugee camp have complained that security forces round up the men at night, question them for long hours and even force them to run. Villagers from Azmut and Dir el-Khatib have complained that people from the nearby settlement of Elon Moreh have threatened them about closing the road that serves the settlement and passes through the village.

Lebanon quiet under shaky cease-fire

BEIRUT. — A precarious truce held in Beirut and South Lebanon yesterday after a week of artillery and rocket exchanges and street fighting between rival Moslem and leftist militiamen, police sources said.

An estimated 79 people were killed and 194 wounded since the fighting started in South Lebanon last Monday.

The fighting between Moslem Shi'ite Amal militiamen and the Palestinian-backed National Movement alliance was the worst bout of communal violence in a year.

The cease-fire agreement was reached after six hours of talks between representatives of the warring factions and Syrian mediators, political sources said.

It was reported yesterday that an assistant U.S. Embassy military attache was shot and injured by a sniper on Saturday as he drove through a crossing between East and West Beirut.

The embassy said the attache was not seriously wounded in the shooting. Police sources identified him as Frederick Charles Hoff. (UPI, AP)

Reputed drug dealers shot in TA

By JEFFREY HELLER
Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Two reputed top local drug dealers were gunned down in their car just a few metres from a police station in the Hatikva quarter last night, police said.

An unknown gunman pumped three bullets into the windshield of the 1982 silver BMW as the two men waited at a traffic light on Derech Lod at 10.20 p.m. The gunman shot from a passing car in which he made good his escape.

Police tentatively identified the victims as Amos and Moshe Mosica. A third Mosica brother was recently found dead from a gunshot wound outside his home, and police said at the time that he might have committed suicide.

One of the men who was ambushed last night was in critical condition, police said. A large amount of foreign currency was found by police in the blood-stained car. No arrests had been made by press time.

line, the Egyptians advance to the Israeli-proposed line, the Multinational Force and Observers (MFO) supervise the disputed area — and Israeli civilian life continue there as now, pending the arbitration suit. In practice that would mean that the large Israeli hotel being built at Taba would be completed and opened as planned. Egypt opposes the continued building of the hotel.

Egypt has made it clear that if the IDF fails to withdraw from Taba beach, there will be no border checkpoint in the area — and therefore no tourism between Eilat and southern Sinai.

There are some voices in the Israel government that have raised the possibility of not withdrawing at all until the Taba issue is resolved. Their reasoning is that it would be better to delay the withdrawal than to withdraw straight into a border dispute.

Begin was not completely un-quivocal at the cabinet meeting yesterday, but several cabinet sources said later they expect him to side with the pro-withdrawal ministers — and thus decide the issue in their favour.

The premier insisted that the IDF's evacuation of the Yamit dikeheads is "entirely separate" from the question of whether Israel will withdraw on time.

Cabinet sources explained that Begin is clearly determined to demonstrate to the nation and to the world that whatever the final decision on the timing of the withdrawal, he was not pressured by the anti-withdrawal extremists.

And there is a more practical element too in the decision yesterday to order the army into Yamit if, as expected, the difficulties with Egypt are ironed out during this week, the dikeheads must be removed from Yamit and the surrounding area in time to allow withdrawal to proceed smoothly and on schedule next Sunday.

mass detentions; and when Cohn said that some aspects of Jewish law are racist.

A senior government source last night said that "Cohn, indeed, got off lightly in the cabinet. It has never happened before that a senior judge has determined 'facts' and passed judgement and sentence on the basis of evidence by one party. (The Druse) rebels against the State of Israel and its laws told Cohn various things — and he repeated them as facts. He should have taken the charges to the Ministry of Justice or the IDF for proper investigation — and not gone straight to the press."

Justice Ministry sources last night said that the government could have replied instantly to Cohn's charges. "These had to first be carefully checked by the IDF, and this took time."

No minister at the cabinet session came to Cohn's defence yesterday.

Golan Druse farmers end 63-day-old strike

By YOEL DAR
Jerusalem Post Reporter

MAJDAL SHAMS. — Golan Druse farmers yesterday ended their strike which lasted 63 days. However, Golan Druse workers, shop owners and pupils are continuing the strike called to protest the extension of Israeli law to their villages and the requirement that they accept Israeli identity cards.

The decision that the farmers could break away from the general strike was made by Druse religious and secular leaders, to prevent the loss of income from not harvesting 7,200 dunams of apple orchards. Last year's income from the apple orchards totalled more than IS70 million.

It also was decided that as much as 25 per cent of this year's income from the harvest in August will be given to those workers still refusing to resume their activities.

Although the leaders softened their position towards the farmers, they continue the religious and social ban on those Golan Druse who refuse to return the identity cards issued by the government.

According to a decision of the religious leaders, each Druse who wants to go to the shrines for prayers must take an oath that he has no identity card. This action was reportedly taken because an unknown number of Druse still hold their cards but are afraid to admit it because of heavy pressure from the "pro-Syrian groups."

Meanwhile, it was learned that scores of Syrian citizens held a demonstration not too far from the border to express their solidarity with the Golan Druse. The demonstrators carried Syrian flags and shouted anti-Israeli slogans.

It was reported that the Druse waved at the demonstrators and promised to continue their struggle against Israel. There was no intervention by Israeli authorities, and no complaints were lodged.

Jerusalem counts cost after week's violence

By ISRAEL AMRANI
Jerusalem Post Reporter

East Jerusalem returned to normal yesterday as shops and schools opened after a week-long strike following last Sunday's Temple Mount shooting incident. Police reported no disturbances.

Last week's violent events which erupted after the suspected gunman Alan Goodman opened fire, left two dead and at least 184 people wounded and injured in the Jerusalem area.

East Jerusalem's Al-Makassed Hospital received, according to its count, 120 patients as a direct result of the violence. Half of those received suffered light injuries, mostly from stones thrown at them and teargas inhalation, and were released after treatment.

About 60 had more serious injuries, including 14 with bullet wounds. In all, 12 patients are still hospitalized, all suffering from bullet wounds. According to a hospital official, the last patient was received at Al-Makassed last Thursday.

One of the Al-Makassed patients is still in the intensive care unit. He is 12-year-old Hamil Hashlamon from the Dehaishe refugee camp. He was admitted with bullet wounds in both his legs which caused major damage to two main arteries, leaving him with his left leg paralyzed.

The Old City's Hospice government hospital received 27 cases. Of them 11 remain hospitalized, but are out of danger.

Hadassah Hospital on Mount Scopus reported admitting 37 patients following last week's unrest, almost all Israelis or tourists injured by stone-throwing Arab youths. Two remain in the hospital, one with a broken jaw and one with a fractured skull.

Jerusalem Police spokesman Ziv Rotem yesterday said that about 200 people were arrested over the past week suspected of incitement and disturbing the peace. Of these, about 25 are still detained.

About a dozen policemen were injured last week. Two were hit by bullets, reportedly fired by Goodman, and the rest by stones and bottles.

Tel Aviv's operating budget near IS4.5b.

By LEA LEVAVI
Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — The municipality's operating budget for the current fiscal year will be IS4.488 billion, Mayor Shlomo Lahat told a press conference yesterday. The budget is still pending approval by the City Council and the Interior Ministry.

About half the budget will go for salaries, he said, and about another quarter for repayment of loans. The remainder will go for operations, including traffic improvements, renovation of sidewalks, replacement of water pipes, construction of centres for the elderly and other activities.

"In the area of culture, the Haaretz Museum, the Tel Aviv Museum and the Cameri Theatre will all get their share," the mayor said.

Lahat's major concern is the income side of the budget, with about IS1.5b. coming from city tax collections. The rest will have to come in one form or another from the government, he said.

He said there has been an unsuccessful experience with arrangements under which part of taxation collected by the government was to be returned to the municipalities. As of last year, Tel Aviv's share was down to 14.5 per cent, and this year, under an agreement reached between the Interior Ministry and the Union of Local Authorities, Tel Aviv's share has gone down to 13.3 per cent, a loss of IS27 million.

"I told Pinhas Elon, chairman of the Union of Local Authorities, that I will recommend to the City Council that we pull out of the union unless our share is brought back up to 14.5 per cent," he said.

Lahat is demanding IS500m. from VAT, IS360m. to replace lost income from amusement and business taxes, and the other IS140m. as compensation for the fact that 40 per cent of the country's VAT stems from commercial activity in Tel Aviv.

The benefactor, who prefers to remain anonymous, reportedly has given money to yeshiva students, to the needy and to almost anyone who asked. His donations are said to have exceeded IS3 million. In addition, he has installed washing machines and other appliances in the homes of several Mea She'arim families. The benefactor, who is due to return to the U.S. tomorrow, expressed his satisfaction at being able to perform the mitzva of anonymous giving.

Likud will back any move by Begin on pullback date

By SARAH HONIG
Post Political Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Prime Minister Menachem Begin is assured of a comfortable majority within the Likud for any move he should decide to make concerning the final evacuation of Sinai — whether he opts for delaying the pullback or going ahead with it. This was the opinion last night of a number of sources within the various parties making up the Likud.

However, seven Likud MKs have asked for a conference with Begin to appeal for a postponement of the withdrawal in view of reported Egyptian violations of the peace treaty.

At the same time, the Herut Knesset faction has asked Begin, Defence Minister Ariel Sharon and Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir to attend an extraordinary session devoted to the withdrawal, immediately after the special cabinet session scheduled for tomorrow on the Sinai issue.

The faction has said that it might wish to expand the meeting to include all Likud MKs and that it would meet tomorrow whether Begin makes an appearance or not.

But Herut Knesset faction

chairman Ronnie Milo has made it clear that he will recommend to the faction that it espouse whatever recommendation Begin makes.

The seven Likud MKs who want to meet with Begin and ask him to consider delaying the pullback, are Herut's Yigal Cohen-Orgad, Yosef Rom, David Magen and Michael Kleiner; Liberal Benny Shalit; La'am's Yigal Cohen; and Akiva Nof, who returned to the Likud after the break-up of the Democratic Movement.

Cohen-Orgad, who negotiated the compensation agreement with the Sinai settlers, is proposing a referendum on the evacuation issue. He argued that "what is of import are not the technical aspects of the Egyptian violations, but what they mean."

The Labour Party responses team advised Begin last night to maintain a vigilant stance on Egyptian violations and "to make sure that they are fully corrected but without leading to any further embarrassment of Israel." The team says that a meeting between the prime minister and the seven Likud MKs "is entirely superfluous, as is the idea that a new document — declaration of intent — be signed between Israel and Egypt."

Zipori's ministry won't yield to hunger strikers

The Communications Ministry will not bow to demands for a licence to broadcast from a private television station by anyone who uses means of pressure such as a hunger strike outside the home of Minister Mordechai Zipori, the ministry spokesman said yesterday.

The spokesman was reacting to the arrest on Friday of Paul Greenwald, owner of the pirate TV ship Odella. Greenwald launched his hunger strike to protest the state's allowing Peace Ship operator Abie Nathan to broadcast his radio programmes from the sea while not allowing him to air TV programmes.

The spokesman commented that "two wrongs don't make a right," and that while Zipori has prepared a bill allowing non-governmental radio stations to operate, there is no such legislation regarding pirate TV stations.

Nation pauses to remember the Holocaust

By JUDY SEGEL
Post Reporter and Staff

Places of entertainment throughout the country will be closed tonight for Martyrs' and Heroes' Remembrance Day, as the nation recalls the death of six million Jews in the Holocaust.

The day of mourning begins at 6 p.m., with the central state ceremony at Yad Vashem in Jerusalem in the presence of President Yitzhak Navon. Interior and Religious Affairs Minister Yosef Burg will be the main speaker at the ceremony, with remarks by Dr. Yitzhak Arad and Gideon Hausner of Yad Vashem, and a prayer by Chief Rabbi Shlomo Goren. Over 1,000 guests, including new immigrants, soldiers, tourists and youth-movement members, are expected to attend.

A two-minute siren at 8 a.m. tomorrow will bring traffic to a halt, as citizens stand in attention in memory of the Holocaust victims.

Another memorial service will be held at Kibbutz Yad Mordechai tomorrow at 5 p.m. President Navon will speak at the event, which will include the reading of the story of a mother and daughter who perished at the hands of the Nazis. Former partisans and fighters will light beacons in memory of the six million.

Israel TV and radio will broadcast special Holocaust memorial programmes.

Arthur Cohn's film The Final Solution will be broadcast on TV for the first time this evening. Cohn, who was also the producer of the prize-winning film The Garden of the Finzi-Continis, yesterday told The Jerusalem Post that the film will show for the first time colour footage from concentration camps and from the Warsaw Ghetto filmed by the Nazis. The material was released especially for this film by the U.S. Congress Archives and by the Federal German government in Bonn, he said. It will also show recently discovered documents pertaining to the deportation of Jews from Berlin, as well as the planning of the Final Solution at its various stages.

The film was shown only once before, last January at the Manila film festival to a record audience of 5,750.

A special postal branch will open at Kibbutz Lohamei Hagetaot tomorrow, and the public may buy envelopes with a cancellation commemorating Martyrs' and Heroes' Remembrance Day.

Tel Aviv Chief Rabbi Yitzhak Yedidya Frankel will deliver a sermon on the Holocaust following a special memorial service this evening at the Great Synagogue in Rehov Allenby.

The association of French Jewish deportees will mark the 40th anniversary of the deportation of the Jews of France at the Rogit memorial (in the Elah Valley) at 3:30 p.m. tomorrow.

Planiat Edith Kraus will give a memorial concert at Bar-Ilan University's Argentina Auditorium tomorrow night as a reminder of the one she gave as an inmate of the Theresienstadt concentration camp in 1942.

A police spokesman said that special attention would be paid to the law prohibiting the opening of coffee shops and places of entertainment on Holocaust day.

Moshe Gilboa, director of the Foreign Ministry's world Jewish affairs division, has asked all of Israel's embassy and consular officials abroad to speak about the Holocaust to the local news media and in appearances before groups. He urged them to help counter the attempts to deny that the Holocaust took place.

Wife, children take to the streets for divorce

TEL AVIV (Yim). — The wife and children of a Tel Aviv accountant who refuses to grant a divorce were joined by several women from the Association for Women's Legal Rights in a street demonstration yesterday demanding "freedom" for the woman.

The demonstrators, who had a police permit, stood across from the man's office on Rehov Lincoln and shouted, "Give her a divorce! Give her a divorce!"

The couple's 16-year-old son, a yeshiva student, carried a placard reading: "Father, give our mother her freedom." Their 15-year-old daughter, a student at a religious high school, held a sign saying: "Father, we want a free mother."

The woman said that she had been fighting for a divorce for 10 years and has been separated from her husband for the past seven years. Her husband refuses to grant her a divorce despite a ruling to that effect by the Tel Aviv Rabbinical Court in 1980, she said.

Mother of eight has premature triplets

Jerusalem Post Reporter

A mother of eight gave birth prematurely to triplets in the Rivka Ziv Hospital in Safed, on Friday evening, a Health Ministry spokesman said yesterday.

The 30-year-old mother, a Christian from the village of Dibel in Southern Lebanon, was in the middle of the seventh month of her pregnancy.

The three infants, each weighing approximately a kilogram, are in incubators. Their condition was described as stable.

Reports denied of IDF diverting Litani

Jerusalem Post Reporter

METULLA. — Sources in South Lebanon yesterday dismissed recent reports emanating from Beirut that Israeli soldiers had taken up positions near the Litani River and are attempting to divert its waters into Israel.

The sources said such reports are entirely baseless.

A powerful explosive device

meanwhile went off near the South

Lebanese village of Beit Luf yesterday just as a patrol of Maj. Sa'ad Haddad's Christian forces was passing. No one was injured by the explosion, the third in the past week in Haddad's enclave.

A spokesman for Haddad's forces said that the mine had been planted by terrorists who infiltrated the area during the night and was a clear violation of the cease-fire negotiated last July along the Lebanese border.

The service operates around the clock every day of the week. It worked well on a trial basis in Tel Aviv, according to the ministry, with an average of 250 calls received daily.

Kids in North face problems, say psychologists

Jerusalem Post Reporter

KIRYAT SHMONA. — A group of psychologists meeting here yesterday warned that if the recommendations made two months ago are not implemented soon, the children living in the North will suffer increasingly severe psychological problems.

The Kfar Giladi recommendations, drawn up two months ago by psychologists who met at the Upper Galilee kibbutz, offer guidelines on behaviour in the event of new hostilities along the border. The recommendations also outline the steps to prepare children, their teachers and their parents for an emergency situation.

The recommendations stress the need to give teachers guidance on how to handle long periods in shelters and the need to prepare both parents and children for possible evacuation. It also was proposed that in the event of evacuation, parents should accompany their children to predetermined and prepared locations in the centre of the country.

At the conference yesterday, psychologists said any outbreak of tension along the border could cause children severe anxiety, including bed-wetting and nightmares.

Haig in marathon talks in Argentina

BUENOS AIRES. — U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig and Argentine military leaders resumed marathon talks yesterday in an effort to resolve this country's conflict with Britain over the Falkland Islands.

"We're continuing to work the problem, involving an effort that a situation of this seriousness demands," Haig told newsmen as he left his downtown hotel to attend Sunday morning mass.

Haig arrived here from London on Thursday night, and was last night in his third straight day of meetings with Argentine leaders.

U.S. State Department spokesman Dean Fischer refused to comment on progress of the talks, which began Friday morning and included 12 hours of negotiation yesterday.

But Argentine Foreign Minister Nicanor Costa Mendez said that the lengthy talks had so far failed to produce progress. He added, however, that the talks are continuing. "We still believe that negotiations are better than war," he said. Some of Secretary Haig's ideas have been accepted. Some are still being discussed. Some arose at the negotiating table. It still is a difficult situation, but the talks are continuing," said Costa Mendez.

The State Department said Haig had not decided whether he would later return to Washington or go on to London for more talks with Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher. Argentine President Leopoldo Galtieri on Saturday said Argentina would "give all" for a respectable peace in the dispute, but called on Britain to make gestures similar to the "very important and costly ones" Argentina had made. He did not elaborate.

On Saturday Galtieri sent a cable to Pope John Paul II demanding that Britain show more flexibility in resolving the crisis, and declaring that Argentina would not be humiliated "by any demand dictated by wounded pride."

Units of the Argentine fleet put to sea last week and a navy communiqué said later that the country was determined to defend its rights to the islands.

Thatcher returned unexpectedly to London late Saturday to confer with her advisers on the crisis, but officials said it did not mean there was a break in the negotiating stand-off with Argentina.

Thatcher met with Foreign Secretary Francis Pym and Home Secretary William Whitelaw, her two most senior cabinet advisers, for what officials called a "stocktaking" session after 24 hours seclusion at Chequers, her official country residence.

Soviets put pressure on U.S. for international law of sea

MOSCOW (Reuters). — The Soviet Union issued a decree yesterday allowing its state enterprises to search for minerals on the ocean bed in an apparent attempt to pressure Washington into signing an international law of the sea convention.

The decree, published by Tass news agency, said the Moscow authorities would issue permits for the development of different areas outside territorial waters and set out regulations for prospecting and mining operations.

But it said prospecting could not start before the beginning of 1988 and declared that the entire decree would be scrapped if an international agreement on developing seabed resources were worked out in the meantime.

The preamble to the new law said Moscow had been forced to take measures to protect its interests because some western states were introducing legislation enabling their domestic firms to proceed with plans to tap the ocean's reserves.

The daily Sovetskaya Pravda said the new Soviet regulations were intended primarily as a rebuttal to U.S. attempts to revise large sections of a proposed law of the sea convention.

Negotiations on a convention which would also cover development of the seabed began eight years ago and were considered almost complete until U.S. President Ronald Reagan's administration demanded extensive changes last year.

Bombs cut off 500,000 Spanish phone lines

MADRID (Reuters). — Gunmen believed to be Basque guerrillas blew up a key Madrid telephone exchange early yesterday causing havoc in Spanish communications.

At least three people were slightly injured when about 170 kg of explosives went off in the four-storey building. Interior Minister Juan Jose Roson said the bombing could be part of a final offensive by the ETA (Basque Homeland and Freedom) separatist movement.

The blasts cut off over half a million interurban telephone lines and partially cut off 20,000 local lines in a business and administrative area of north Madrid, police sources said.

Some lines were affected at the office of Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo Sotelo, who summoned an emergency meeting of his senior ministers.

No one immediately claimed responsibility for the attack, which began, according to police, when five gunmen posed as policemen inspecting facilities at the exchange for the World Cup Soccer tournament.

They held the night-duty staff at gunpoint, planted the bombs and then fled, opening fire at a police patrol without hitting anyone.

Two passersby were injured when the blasts blew huge holes in the building and hurled steel girders and broken glass across the street. A fireman was injured while putting out the blaze. Unconfirmed reports said two telephone company employees were also injured.

Salvador Sanchez Teran, president of the telephone company, said the damage was "very serious" and could not be repaired immediately.

Police also cleared a main railway station in north Madrid and stopped trains for an hour after an anonymous caller told newspapers that bombs were planted at several stations and at Madrid airport. No bombs were found.

ETA guerrillas blasted Madrid's airport and two main railway stations three years ago, killing seven people and injuring over 100.

The separatist organization last Friday gave security forces 30 days to leave the Basque country or face increased attacks.

The ultimatum posed a major threat to security in the run-up to the soccer competition opening in Spain on June 13.

Mujahedin claims 'uprising' in Teheran base

BEIRUT. — Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini yesterday warned Iran's military of discord among their ranks, as the country's main opposition group reported an "uprising" in Teheran's largest army base.

"Victory may only be achieved with unity, which must be safeguarded at all times. If there are elements sowing discord among the military personnel, the commanders must be notified at once," Teheran Radio quoted Khomeini as saying.

The revolutionary leader also warned military personnel not to join political parties or groups.

Khomeini's message, made on the occasion of Iran's Armed Forces Day, came as a statement from the leftist Mujahedin Khalq urban guerrilla group reported an "uprising" in Teheran's Lavizan military base.

"In a fierce clash between Mujahedin supporters in Teheran's Lavizan garrison and supporters of Khomeini on March 27, at least 60 army officers were killed," UPI was told yesterday in a telephone call from the Paris-based headquarters of the Mujahedin.

"All Mujahedin supporters left the garrison safely long before the revolutionary guards could take over the clash," it was reported.

The Mujahedin did not give the source of its information, but said the following day several officers who were not involved were executed by the army revolutionary judge Ayatollah Mohammad Reza Bahri. (AP, UPI)

30,000 Poles hear plea for release of women internees

WARSAW. — Roman Catholic Primate Jozef Glemp yesterday called for the release of all women internees by May, drawing cheers from some 30,000 Poles at the biggest outdoor gathering since martial law was instituted.

"We kindly request that our authorities release for the month of May, the month of Saint Mary, all interned women," Glemp said during a two-hour ceremony bidding farewell to a replica portrait of Our Lady of Czestochowa, Poland's holiest icon.

"Let there be no more interned women during May," Glemp said. "They should disappear as internees. We are asking the authorities for this."

It was the first appeal since the December 13th declaration of martial law for the release of a specific group of internees.

The crowd, reflecting the depth of religious reverence here where some 80 to 90 per cent of the people belong to the church, spilled down the old town's historic King's Road, into its Castle Square and away on sidestreets from the red, white, yellow and blue altar outside St. Anne's Church.

Such a gathering has a special significance, since the authorities have banned outdoor demonstrations. However, it had official approval, and police closed the area to traffic.

Such gestures, along with the lifting of curfew last weekend for Easter and Saturday night for Orthodox Easter suggest that church-state relations retain a measure of coexistence despite occasional conflict.

Meanwhile, the official PAP news agency said yesterday that military leader Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski will travel to Budapest in the next few days for talks with the Hungarian Communist leadership.

Jaruzelski's trip is part of a series of visits aimed at re-establishing Poland's credibility with its Communist bloc allies after last December's military takeover ended 16 months of challenge to the Polish system by the independent trade union Solidarity. (AP, Reuters)

U.S. studies Soviet summit proposal

WASHINGTON. — The White House, in an initial response to Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev's proposal for a well-prepared meeting with President Ronald Reagan in the autumn, said on Saturday night that it was studying the suggestion.

But a White House spokesman also said that the U.S. still hopes the Kremlin chief would come to the special UN disarmament session in New York in June, as suggested by Reagan. In remarks to the Communist Party daily Pravda earlier Saturday, Brezhnev described Reagan's invitation as "vague."

Western diplomats in Moscow said that Reagan's proposal was probably doomed from the start, as the Kremlin, always conscious of protocol, would regard the kind of semi-formal discussion the U.S. President suggested as inappropriate. (Reuters, AP)

Sandinistas threaten to kill ex-hero

MANAGUA (AP). — Nicaragua's army chief of staff has issued a death threat against Eden Pastora Gomez, called hero of the country's revolution who broke a nine-month silence to criticize what he called the new "reign of terror" in his homeland.

General Joaquin Cuadra implied in a speech on Saturday night that Nicaragua has hired gunmen to kill Pastora, who helped the Sandinista National Liberation Front topple right-wing dictator Anastasio Somoza in July 1979. Sandinista gunmen are widely believed to be responsible for killing Somoza in Paraguay in September 1980.

"Wherever the traitor Eden Pastora may be, the arm of revolutionary justice can reach him in the same way Anastasio Somoza was reached on a street in the capital of Paraguay," Cuadra said.

Pastora, known as "Commander Zero," during his guerrilla days, resigned his post as militia chief and deputy defence minister on July 7 and fled the country. His whereabouts were unknown until Thursday when he called a news conference in San Jose, capital of neighbouring Costa Rica.

At the conference Pastora, 44, vowed to fight what he described as foreign interference in Nicaragua's revolution. He also denounced the Sandinistas for buying Soviet tanks, sending air-force pilots to Eastern Europe for training, censoring the press and confiscating private property.

Pastora's emergence as an opposition figure is considered a major blow to the regime he helped bring to power. Although he is shy and lacks the oratory skills of junta leader Daniel Ortega, many foreign observers considered him to be the most charismatic figure among the Sandinistas.

First papal visit to Bologna in 125 years

BOLOGNA (AP). — Pope John Paul II arrived yesterday at the "Showcase of Eurocommunism" to become the first pontiff in 125 years to visit this northern Italian city. City officials expected more than 150,000 people at the day-long ceremonies, including an afternoon mass in Piazza VIII Agosto.

The 61-year-old pope planned to pray at the Bologna train station, where 85 people were killed in a terrorist bombing on August 2, 1980.

L'Osservatore Romano, the Vatican's newspaper, said in special articles on the trip that Bologna represents a "synthesis of the problems and the hopes" of the Roman Catholic Church.

The paper pointed out that while the city is the "red capital" of Italy, it also has one of the highest living standards of any city in the country, and is a "hybrid of hedonism and collectivism."

Bologna has been ruled by Communist mayors since the end of World War II and has gained the reputation as one of the most efficiently and honestly run cities in Italy.

Notre Dame cathedral hit again by arsonists

PARIS (UPI). — Two fires apparently set on purpose broke out yesterday in Notre Dame cathedral and caused slight damage. It was the second time in a week that fire has started in the 800-year-old church.

Fire consumed a drapery in the nave around 3 p.m. while tourists from around the world milled through the vast stone edifice. The flames were extinguished quickly.

A half-hour later, a second fire blazed up in a heap of refuse left in a small chapel on one side of the cathedral near the nave. The damage was minor, firemen said.

When the cathedral was jammed for an Easter Monday service on April 12, fire broke out in a magazine-souvenir stand.

Bodies retrieved after Nile ferry accident

CAIRO (AP). — Frogmen yesterday retrieved a total of 38 bodies out of the 60 believed drowned when a Nile River ferry capsized in a canal, and its owner has been arrested, police sources said.

Only 15 were saved when the ferry capsized on Saturday in the 50-metre-wide Ismailia canal, 10 kilometres north east of Cairo. Police said that the boat was carrying around three times more passengers than its licence allowed.

The ferry was carrying labourers from a factory to their homes across the canal.

Borg makes a good point

TOKYO (Reuters). — Bjorn Borg came up with the best possible answer to those who feel he spent years in tennis by thrashing Argentine Guillermo Vilas 6-1 to win a $250,000 four-man tournament here yesterday.

Borg, who will not compete in Wimbledon or French championships this year because limited tournament schedule do not grant him automatic qualification, produced his best form since his comeback after a five-month rest from the sport.

The 25-year-old Swede put well-publicized problems behind him to dispose of Vilas, recently a form man on the circuit, in just minutes.

Borg, who struggled to a three-set win over American part-time ace Vince Van Patten in his first match on Saturday, earned a prize of $110,000 for his two days' work.

Vilas collected $70,000 while Van Patten, who lost to Borg in the first round, picked up $4,000. In Los Angeles, top seeded Jimmy Connors and seeded Mel Purcell moved through to the final of the Pacific Southwest Open. Connors overhauled Victor Amaya 6-2, 6-4, while Purcell rallied to defeat Brian Teacher 4-6, 7-6, 6-2.

Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia and John McEnroe of the United States met in the final of the event in Houston. Lendl swept 6-2, 6-3, while McEnroe of the United States, who had a comeback to defeat Australian Peter McNamara 5-7, 6-2, 6-3.

Elsewhere in the National Basketball Association games it was Philadelphia 100, Washington 98; Atlanta 109, Indiana 91; Chicago 112, Cleveland 102; Kansas City 123, Denver 121; San Antonio 118, Dallas 106; Milwaukee 112, New York 99; Houston 107, Utah 100; Phoenix 113, Portland 98; Los Angeles 125, and Golden State 109.

Drink problem in the White House?

By JAMES SIMON/Boston

Richard Nixon: 'Incoherent'

got to nuke them." From the quoted conversation, it is not clear who "them" was.

The "plumbers" were set up on "Nixon's order for a 'non-legal team' to look into the publication of the Pentagon papers, a secret study of the origins of American involvement in Vietnam that was leaked to newspapers by Daniel Ellsberg, formerly on Kissinger's staff.

Krogh, now a lawyer in Seattle, said that he has not seen the Atlantic article, but basically confirmed as accurate the remark attributed to him quoting Young.

Krogh said he also doesn't know what the "them" refers to in the quote attributed to Nixon, "Henry, we've got to nuke them."

Krogh said that "Young did mention something like that to me, but whether Nixon actually said it, I don't know for a fact. It's hearsay almost twice removed."

Asked if he thought Nixon was a drunk or had a drinking problem, Krogh said, "I wouldn't be able to confirm that. That never evidenced itself that I saw."

David Young was at Oxford University and could not be reached immediately for comment.

Hersh's account of Nixon's alleged drinking problem is not the first time it has been written about.

Two of the men closest to Nixon in the White House, Haldeman and John D. Ehrlichman, discussed it in their memoirs.

Haldeman, Nixon's chief of staff, said on Tuesday from his home in Los Angeles that he would not comment on the Hersh article. In his book The Ends of Power he said Nixon often delivered rambling monologues late at night, his speech slurred. But, he said, the cause was fatigue, not drinking.

Ehrlichman, former domestic counselor for Nixon, explains in his book With Power that "it didn't take much alcohol to affect Nixon under the best of circumstances."

The Atlantic article is drawn from a book by Hersh that is to be published early next year. The author, winner of the 1970 Pulitzer Prize for his reporting on the My Lai massacre in Vietnam, interviewed many former White House officials and said he obtained access to unpublished records of the Watergate prosecutors. A number of the anecdotes quote second or third-hand sources.

ATLANTIC editor William Whitworth said on Tuesday the magazine hired Tom Teal of Washington as a fact-checker for the Hersh story. Teal worked "for years" as a checker at The New Yorker and also worked in President Jimmy Carter's speech-writing office.

Nicholas Ruwe, Nixon's aide, said in New York on Tuesday that the former president "only comments on his own books."

At Kissinger's Washington office, Christine Vick, his personal assistant, said "Dr. Kissinger has not yet seen the article. He cannot comment on what he has not seen. After he has seen it, he believes he will have nothing to add to what he has written in his memoirs."

Hersh says that Kissinger told his staff that at his first formal White House reception, he met Pat Nixon and "naturally began to praise the president lavishly, but Mrs. Nixon leaned over and interrupted him by saying, 'Haven't you seen through him yet?'" Kissinger would tell the anecdote to the staff and joke about it, "as if to say 'This man is not stable.'" Hersh quotes Morris as saying. (Associated Press)

RICHARD NIXON was often so drunk in the White House that when late-night cables arrived, Henry Kissinger would tell aides, "there's no use waking him up — he'd be incoherent," says an article in Atlantic Monthly.

The article, in the May issue, also says that Kissinger regarded his chief aide, Alexander M. Haig, Jr., as "a double-dealer who had ingratiated himself with Nixon and (H.R.) Haldeman and other senior aides by savaging Kissinger behind his back and spying on him."

The author, Seymour M. Hersh, paints a portrait of a duplicitous Kissinger, then national security adviser to Nixon, who was "more and more subservient, even fawning, to his patron" but "increasingly vicious and outspoken outside the Oval Office."

The article quotes Roger Morris, a member of the National Security Council staff under Nixon, as saying he often listened in on conversations between Kissinger and "an obviously drunk Nixon."

Hersh wrote: "There were many times when a cable would come in late, and Henry would say, 'There's no sense waking him up — he'd be incoherent,'" Morris recalls. The young aide was frightened by the idea of a president who was not fully competent after sundown. He often wondered what would happen if the Soviet Union attacked at night."

The Associated Press made four attempts this week to contact Morris at two Santa Fe, New Mexico, numbers, where Hersh said the former NSC aide could be reached. There was no answer.

Hersh writes that by the end of 1969, Nixon's first year in the presidency, the backbiting grew intense. He says this is what Kissinger was telling associates:

"Mel Laird (secretary of defence) was a megalomaniac who constantly leaked anti-Kissinger stories to the press; and Richard Nixon was a secret drunk of dubious intelligence."

The Atlantic article also claims that Kissinger felt his being Jewish was "a chink in his armour — a vulnerability that could threaten his position" with Nixon, who, Hersh says, often criticized liberal Jews in front of Kissinger. Former Nixon senior aide John D. Ehrlichman is quoted by Hersh as saying, "Nixon would talk about Jewish traitors, and the Eastern Jewish establishment — Jews at Harvard. And he'd play off Kissinger — 'Isn't that right, Henry? Don't you agree?' And Henry would respond: 'Well, Mr. President — there are Jews and Jews.'"

THE AUTHOR, however, asks the question: how serious was Nixon's drinking problem? He answers it by pointing out that many former aides dismiss its significance. They say Nixon had a notoriously low capacity for alcohol "and would slur his words and appear to be somewhat drunk after one or two highballs."

Emil Krogh, who headed the White House "plumbers" operation with one-time Kissinger aide David Young, is quoted by Hersh as saying Young "told me of the time he was on the phone (listening in) when Nixon and Kissinger were talking. Nixon was drunk and he said, 'Henry, we've

Chauncey views the operation as "a very personal thing, much like people get involved with their pets."

"I can tell you which one mores, which one stands in which corner of his stall, whose buddy is whose, etc.," she said.

Her emotion shows when she speaks of one of her two favorites: "It was a mare that I showed in cutting and it was sold to a man living in Nevada," she said. "I used to see it being ridden by someone else and it always looked so sad. It was thin and you could see its heart was not in its work. It just broke my heart."

"One Christmas Eve, Tom told me to go out to the garage. I thought he'd gotten me a new car. But there was Tasamar. We were back together after all those years. Tasamar, now 29, is retired on Catalina.

MRS. CHAUNCEY is at the ranch from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. almost every day, meeting the veterinarian each morning to check the mares.

"I like to write in the record book myself," she said. "I talk to the owners, I know what their horses are doing," she said. "It is important to be right there checking, rather than getting the information second-hand."

"Playing with the colts is very important. All the babies are terribly friendly. They just aren't afraid of people. Once they're weaned, it's even more important to be around them. They get like children whose mothers and fathers aren't home. They get kind of wild and need some type of parental supervision and human touch."

One colt this spring is named "Gentleman Frank." The son of Lady Deedie — the names reflecting a mutual admiration society between Mrs. Chauncey and a California buyer.

Another of the mares is Deedie's Delight, and Mrs. Chauncey named a stallion after her husband — "Tom terrific."

MRS. CHAUNCEY spends much of her time replying to letters from people interested in entering the Arabian business.

"They send pictures or pedigrees and want to know about their horses. A lot of people don't have access to the stud books."

She said 98 per cent of the people who purchase Arabians from the Chauncey stables keep in touch.

"They send me 'granny pictures' when their horses win awards. It's a very personal thing and I want to keep it that way. Once it becomes big business, it's just like any other business and the horse is a commodity."

The Chaunceys' love of horses is not limited to Arabians. The stable's mascot is not Nabarr's majestic son, Kabarr, but a one-metre-high Palomino-coloured miniature called Geronimo.

Geronimo was Chauncey's Christmas present in 1981 after Mrs. Chauncey conducted a two-year search before finding "a little horse that looked something like an Arabian" in New York.

Students fight book ban

By JOYCE EGGINTON/New York

WHEN SOCIOLOGY students at Island Trees High School met last month, there was one obvious topic for class discussion: their school's "book banning" case, which, at that very moment, was being argued before the U.S. Supreme Court.

But by order of the school administration, teachers were silent on the subject — as they have been throughout a six-year controversy which has come to typify an extraordinary but growing aspect of contemporary American education.

The Island Trees School Board serves a predominantly white-skinned, blue-collar community in Long Island, about 50 kilometres from New York City. As in most small towns across the U.S., local schools are governed by a board of unpaid elected officials with wide control over school budgets and policy. Such officials are usually public-spirited men and women who put long hours into a thankless job, but they are rarely educators.

The trouble in Island Trees began after an election in 1975 when the board was taken over by conservatives who believed it to be their duty to impress what they thought to be local community standards upon high school students.

As expressed by one teacher who must necessarily be nameless, these standards precluded any classroom mention of such controversial topics as sex, race, religion (other than Christianity) and abortion. On the basis of material obtained from a right-wing parents' organization, they determined that a number of books were "objectionable" and should be banned from their school libraries.

The initial list included Why I Am Not a Christian, by Bertrand Russell, Slaughterhouse Five, by Kurt Vonnegut, Soul on Ice by the black militant writer Eldridge Cleaver, The Fixer, by Bernard Malamud (a Pulitzer prize-winning novel), The Naked Ape, by Desmond Morris, and an anthology of short stories by black writers.

NONE OF THE board members had read all of these books. They made the decision on the basis of a pamphlet circulated by the parents' organization, giving out-of-context quotes from what the teacher called "the dirty big."

After much private discussion, they grudgingly agreed to let Bertrand Russell remain on the library shelves, but demanded removal of the other authors.

Although many teachers were angry and frustrated, few dared to speak out for fear of losing their jobs. Those who were vocal received anonymous telephone threats. The school system's chief librarian, Irene Turin, who opposed the book-banning, was told that she could no longer use her office telephone or attend professional conferences. After a time, she said, "it was as though an iron curtain had been drawn around the school district with all effective opposition silenced."

When the controversy was at its height, the local public library put the banned books on display, but promptly removed them after receiving anonymous warnings that the library's budget might be cut unless the exhibition was dismantled.

With backing from the New York Civil Liberties Union, several senior students challenged the school board's decision. After hearings in lower courts, the case — the first of its kind — has now come before the U.S. Supreme Court, which is expected to rule on it by June. That ruling is being anxiously awaited by school boards and educators across America, where right-wing attempts to influence school studies are becoming more widespread.

AMONG EXTREMIST political and religious groups, campaigns to restrict educational reading matter have long been a factor in America's tax-supported schools. But now, encouraged by the political climate of the Reagan Administration, these efforts are beginning to flourish.

Leanne Katz, who heads the National Coalition Against Censorship, said that in some elementary schools there have even been campaigns to ban the fairytale Snow White on grounds that the heroine was immorally cohabitating with the dwarfs.

She also quoted from a pamphlet currently being circulated across the country to right-wing parents' groups, urging parents to insist that certain issues should be banned from discussion in schools.

In addition to premarital sex, incest and Communism, the long list includes racial equality, police brutality, anger, fear, love, marriage and free enterprise.

DESECRATION OF HOLY SITES

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post Sir, — No one will question Anwar Nusseibeh's right to speak with authority on the subject of desecration of holy sites. He served as Jordan's Minister of Defence during a period when the Jordanians, in a planned, systematic, officially inspired campaign, razed all but one of 74 Jewish synagogues (some of them centuries old) that had graced the Old City until the Jordan conquest in 1948. Hundreds of Scrolls of the Law, reverently preserved for generations, were burned to ashes. Thousands of sacred books were committed to the flames.

Scores of yeshivot were reduced to hollow shells, their interiors used as chicken runs and stables, filled with dung heaps, garbage and sewage. The Jewish cemetery in Hebron, where victims of the riots of 1929 had been laid to rest, was plowed over and converted into a tomato patch.

Under Jordanian rule 38,000 of the 50,000 tombstones on the Mount of Olives were vandalized or stolen, many of them winding up in the Jordanian Army camp in Bethany where they were used as building material in barracks, retaining walls, paths and latrines.

Although the camp, which was designated as a holy site by the Ministry of Religions, has been allowed to fall into disrepair, it can be viewed today.

After having interviewed the Arab caretakers of the cemetery appointed by the Jordanian Government, the inter-ministerial committee, which investigated the desecrations reported: "The Jordanian authorities — civilian as well as military — bear the full and clear-cut responsibility for all the acts of abomination and desecration carried out in the cemeteries on the Mount of Olives, at Hebron and in the various camps of the Jordanian Army. It is clear, beyond all shadow of doubt, that the authorities not only knew of the acts of defacement and devastation, but that these acts were the direct result of systematic, deliberate, and careful planning in the highest echelons of the Jordanian Government."

How dare Nusseibeh lead a procession of protest decrying the act of a single madman who will soon be brought to trial by the Israel Government — Nusseibeh, of all people!

ISRAEL'S CREDIBILITY

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post Sir, — The IDF spokesman's interest in detailing the ousted West Bank mayors' "hostile activities" (March 26) is fully understandable, since the firing of democratically elected mayors inevitably triggered worldwide and local criticism. But the army's best efforts to justify its step, responsible to a large degree for setting off a tragic round of violence, sound ludicrous to anyone reasonably well-informed about Palestinian and West Bank politics.

To start out, the spokesman makes some silly errors of nomenclature: Al-Hurriya is a joint publication by a Lebanese leftist party and the Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine — there is no such thing as the "Popular Democratic Front" referred to. Also, the story accuses Ramallah's Karim Khalaf of membership in the "clandestine Palestine Liberation Front, members of which were convicted for terrorist acts." The probable intention here is the Palestine National Front, an early 1970s attempt by West Bank communists and others close to the party to form a locally based political force, opposed to the traditional pro-Jordanian leadership — and independent from the PLO as well. The PNF was explicitly not a military organization. It was, of course, clandestine — since Israel refused to allow any political activity in the occupied territories.

Such factual errors cast doubts on the IDF spokesman's other vague allegations such as that Khalaf "involved himself in subversive activity," and on the authenticity of "rejectionist statements" attributed to him in the report. I do not have the facilities to check the Al-Hurriya statement, but personally, I suspect that somewhere along the line, it was falsified. In numerous conversations with Khalaf over the past six years, I have heard him say very clearly no to Camp David and autonomy as proposed by Begin; yes to peace between Israel and a Palestinian state coexisting across the pre-1967 border.

The spokesman says that "Khalaf was twice implicated in court as an accomplice of convicted terrorists." If that were true, he would long ago have been jailed or expelled. Thousands of West Bankers have been given long sentences for much less — membership in illegal organizations, for instance, or mere possession of their literature. Surely the military government would have jumped at an opportunity to convict the mayor of participating in terror.

Finally, in digging up the charge that Bassam Shak'a of Nabhus told former IDF territories coordinator Danny Matt in late 1975 that he supported the coastal road massacre, the spokesman must really think we have short memories. When a leaked transcript of the controversial conversation was printed in Ha'aretz, it showed that the deposed Nabhus mayor had said nothing of the kind. The attempt to expel him fizzled out shortly thereafter.

Israel's credibility in the outside world has taken a nosedive since 1967, when most of the Arab states and the Palestinians refused to recognize or negotiate with it. Today, the world is getting a very different and, I am afraid, much more accurate picture of events in the occupied territories than the one being disseminated by the IDF spokesman for local consumption. In an apparent attempt to prove that there really is "no one to talk to" among the Palestinians, the government is expelling, firing and otherwise casting aside an authentic leadership which had expressed a real willingness to provide a link between Israel and the — like it or not — recognized Palestinian leadership, the PLO.

ISRAELI SCHOLARS AND THE WEST BANK

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post Sir, — As a fellow of the Institute for Advanced Studies at the Hebrew University, I wish to issue an appeal to Israeli scholars, especially those specializing in Middle East and Islamic studies, to state openly their opinions of the policies of the Israeli government on the West Bank. In particular, I would like to know what these academicians think of the role played by Menachem Milson, a professor of Arabic literature with in-residence status at the Institute for Advanced Studies, a prestigious centre at one of the more prestigious universities in the world. I issue this appeal knowing full well how it will seem, presented by a foreigner, a non-Jew, to Israelis sensitive to outside criticism.

My point is that the apparent silence of most Israeli scholars can be read as tacit acceptance of Milson's policies. I acknowledge that this silence may reflect embarrassment more than support, but the situation on the West Bank, the killings, settler harassments, and the hate they engender, go beyond mere policy debate. They go to the heart of the question of what the aim of Israel's policy is and what it seeks to create. One thing it fosters beyond doubt is hatred of Israelis, a hatred created by Israeli actions rather than being the manifestation of inherent anti-Jewish feelings.

Recent events on the West Bank as a result of Israel's "civil" administrative policy give the impression that Israel has become a colonial state. The pressure exerted on the Arab population; the use of any means possible to confiscate land from Arabs for Jewish settlement; settler intimidation of Arab villagers; the use of settlers along with soldiers to quell disturbances; the deliberate, even pathological vindictiveness of settlers; the rule of an "expert" in the affairs of the subject people, a man whose supposedly superior knowledge of Arabs encourages him to apply a policy of systematic intimidation, including the arming of loyalists in the village leagues — all these actions, with the settlers as colonialists, remind one of French policy in North Africa, especially Algeria.

Israel justifies its determination to keep the West Bank on the basis of security needs. How will these needs be met if nearly one million Arabs are placed under Israeli rule, albeit in happy "autonomy"? Will Israel have any choice other than to continue and even to intensify what amounts to colonial rule over a subject majority by a ruling minority?

Indeed, there is a choice from the Begin government's perspective, making Jordan a Palestinian state, an idea which has gained acceptance in some academic circles. Just how Israel's security needs would be met with a PLO-dominated state adjacent to it is a matter for conjecture; it apparently does not matter so long as Judea and Samaria are secured. Military might will prevail — presumably forever.

Nevertheless, it is possible to respect intellectually a stance which harps constantly at PLO terrorism against Israel and its denial of Israel's legitimacy, but support such PLO actions if they are intended to undermine the legitimacy of the Jordanian government?

The Begin-Sharon-Milson policy is designed, I believe, to encourage Arabs to leave the West Bank. The intent is to create an atmosphere of both resentment and of realization that nationalist aspirations cannot be fulfilled on the West Bank.

Indeed, the more repressive the policies on the West Bank, the more militancy will arise, along with growing despair at the likelihood of achieving nationalist hopes. How do Israelis in general and Israeli scholars in particular feel about this?

Israeli scholars may not wish to save Menachem Milson from himself, but they might wish to stand up and be counted in favour of or against his administration, whatever their feelings about Yasser Arafat. American academicians did so when they saw the involvement of some South Asia specialists in the US effort in Vietnam; those they attacked defended themselves. Is it too much to hope that a similar debate might happen here, whatever the feelings of the participants about the views I have expressed?

CENSORSHIP

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post Sir, — One of the consequences of the recent banning of certain books for distribution on the West Bank is that this event will probably be reported in the prestigious journal, Index on Censorship. This ought to give us Israelis no pleasure. Inclusion in its pages will raise questions which may justly disturb our hasbara experts.

It may be of interest to Post readers to know that the Index has just marked its tenth anniversary. Its publishers are a non-profit-making limited company called Writers and Scholars International Ltd. It has an illustrious board of directors. Also it has an even more prestigious advisory board.

Index publishes news about acts of censorship worldwide and provides a shop window for banished works. Unfortunately, suppression of the written word continues to be a pattern for humanity, as its pages reveal.

ANCIENT COINS

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post Sir, — Among the "Secrets revealed" by Leah Abramowitz (April 9, review of archeology books about Jerusalem) was apparently Professor Avigad's discovery of "many coins bearing such significant dates as '69 CE'." I find it truly remarkable that our forefathers of the Second Temple period and the Revolt against the Romans (or even the Romans themselves) knew that they were in the 69th year of the Christian Era. Perhaps further archeological digs might reveal coins dated "69 BC." RAPHAEL GEFEN

DRIVE CAREFULLY.
BETTER TO BE LATE
THAN THE LATE

IL is one of the pleasantest and most satisfying months in the garden. It is a real joy to be out and now with lots of colour in flower beds and spring's display of flowering shrubs like Viburnum mentosum (Japanese snowball), ulion silensis (flowering maple), artium junceum (Spanish broom) and Syringa vulgaris (common lilac). Against the sky, one can marvel at the gorgeous trusses of violet-blue flowers on the tropical Jacaranda urtfolia tree and the spectacular coming of the Cercis siliquastrum (red tree) with its small, magenta-pink flowers that create a coloured carpet on the ground.

One of the joys of gardening is at while enjoying the present, one always looking forward to the future.

Yet many gardeners are complaining about common problems seed not coming up; seedlings not growing when they have; sickened tips on leaves; etc. To be blamed are the sharp fluctuations in the weather of the last few weeks. Some early insects like the spittlebugs are also causing trouble. Destroy their spittle nests with a stream of water. Partly cover the soil of your hose with your refiner to create a strong jet of water to be aimed at the ugly lumps of spittle, which hold baby insects and should be washed off the stems of your plants. Have a good look in and around flower beds. Spittle bugs do not distinguish between weeds and cultivated plants. Destroy their nests wherever you see them. Cut away all grey and yellow plant tops and start feeding encourage growth.

Leaf feedings work quickly. Fill a mist-sprayer with lukewarm tap water and add a few drops of liquid fertilizer. Nutricol and Meirav, for example, are available at garden centres and nurseries. Don't forget to spray the undersides of foliage.

Spraying leaves is best done in the evening. If you spray them 1-2 times a week, then when they get a nice, warm day, they will really get busy growing. Water, too? Yes — thoroughly and immediately after the spraying and then spread around a mulch of dry leaves, pine needles, wood shavings, etc. This will prevent evaporation.

Mulching during spring and summer is especially useful in spots with insufficient protective shade against the sun and dry, east winds of the hamsh. These desert winds and suddenly changing temperatures hasten the process of fading.

A WELL-KEPT garden should show flowers most of the year. Showing their colours now are nasturtiums that were sown in February, as well as early planted calendula, snapdragon, alyssum, dimorphoteca (African daisy), pansy plants and other annuals. Old-fashioned geraniums are awakening and putting out new bloom.

Biennials planted about a year ago, such as bellflower, foxglove and lunaria, are either already blooming or will soon be producing their long-lasting, impressive flowers, which do well as cut flowers.

What to plant now? Any reader who has regrets now instead of a floral show, and fears a bare garden in the coming weeks, is advised to buy the ready flower plants most nurseries are offering at reasonable prices. They come in little yoghurt cups and should be transplanted with their root balls intact. You just have to prepare the ground in your garden or in balcony boxes. Choose petunia, tagetes, calendula, pansy, alyssum, delphinium, godetia, clarkia, ageratum or other flowers. If you water the cups slightly before transplanting, the plants will slide out that much more easily. All the plants mentioned here will start to flower by the end of this month and will probably bloom until early July.

THE SWING OF SPRING

Roses. Soon we will be enjoying the first roses of the season. Rose bushes, when pruned, watered, dug and fed, generally flower from April until winter. Some, especially those in the warmer regions of Israel, even bloom in winter.

The son of famed rose grower Papa Meiland, Alon Meiland, has created a new species at his Riviera nurseries, an orange-red flowering dwarf rose called Orange Meilandina. This rose is most suitable for containers and balcony boxes, flowers for eight months, producing dozens of blooms on each stem, and is completely resistant to aphids and fungus diseases. I hope rose specialist David Gilad, who has brought nearly all of the beautifully flowering modern roses into Israel, will be able to import a few of this new species so as to provide them for our local nurseries.

Sweet peas. If you followed the advice of "Gardener's Corner" and sowed sweet peas in October, you should be enjoying their first bloom just now. The flowering season of this multicoloured, deliciously scented, annual climber varies according to the climate. In sunny places, especially in the plains, they flower earlier than those in Jerusalem gardens shaded by old pines or other trees. Few gifts are as fine as a bouquet of these fragrant flowers. Cut them daily. The more you cut, the more flowers will appear the next day.

ANNUALS planted now will last until summer. What then? The experienced gardener still has surprises in store. He has planted (as we advised) summer-flowering bulbs (tubers, corms and rhizomes) in well-prepared, composted soil or in bucket-size containers.

If you haven't done this, you still have some time left to get going — that is, until the end of April. Dahlias, gladioli, tritomas, cannas and other species of liliaceae will bear wonderful flowers from early August until late October. By planting them now, you will avoid a flowerless period in your garden. And if you put them in containers, you'll be able to be your own garden architect by moving them to the "show window" of your patio or balcony just when their outstanding bloom will be at its peak.

Chrysanthemum for autumn colour. If you don't possess any of these long-lasting perennials, which flower from early autumn until winter, you can buy them now in small pots and transplant them either into flower beds or suitable containers.

Nurseries offer mums that are white, orange, yellow, pink, red and purple. This flower is also available in widely different sizes. Choose giants, miniatures are "spider" chrysanthemums.

Until they flower, chrysanthemums need fourfold treatment: (1) pinching of tops, to get more branching and thus more flowers (2) occasional spraying against aphids (3) regular feeding (4) regular watering.

When planting chrysanthemums, keep their colours in mind. Never plant white and yellow species close together. Colour contrast is a prerequisite of an attractive garden.

I keep my mums in big pots and balcony boxes in the background of my garden and treat them as prescribed. When the time comes, about the end of August, I bring them into the limelight. I would never want to miss them in my autumn garden. For six years, I have been growing a yellow variety that flowers until January, and in addition to its colour outdoors, it provides me with many decorative, long-lasting cut flowers when no other blooms are available in the garden.

Cacti. Now you may water and feed again all cacti plants that are no longer dormant. This is also the time to plant all kinds of cacti from cuttings and side sprouts. Cuttings of Christmas cactus (Epiphyllum truncatum) may be inserted into small pots. Each cutting should consist of four or five leaf pads. After making a clean cut, push the lower half of the leaf base into the container. The filling should be equal parts peat and perlite or peat and sand.

A few more hints for a spring-summer-autumn programme: sow sunflowers. Not just the common ones valued for their edible seeds. All available kinds provide a most attractive background in the summer flower garden.

Sow portulaca for a low-growing, multicoloured carpet where spring-flowering bulbs are still in the ground, and their drying foliage gives the spot an ugly look. Later, when you remove the dry leaves, the portulaca will spread over the ground, and since it has very shallow roots, it will not disturb the resting bulbs.

There is a way to make your summer and autumn garden more decorative with tomatoes and other vegetables in tins — but about this another time.

Remember that gardening, like all the important and most of the delightful things in life, is worthwhile when you do it yourself.

Feeling the pinch

JEWISH SCENE/Geoffrey Wigoder

hardest hit. It is estimated that 300,000 New York Jews live below the poverty line and suffer from reduced benefits. Jewish social, health and vocational agencies have lost millions of federal dollars for day care, rehabilitation, nutrition services, etc. Vocational services have been severely cut. 200 New York agency staff have lost their jobs. A youth-training programme for 400 teenagers has been abolished. All this adds up, also, to a threat to the Jewish middle class: many Jews went into the helping professions — social work, health, education — and their layoffs can have serious consequences.

Many elderly are affected. Thus in South Miami Beach, it is estimated that 75 per cent of the 20,000 elderly Jews are poverty-stricken. Programmes for their assistance are now endangered. Cuts in Medicaid threaten the maintenance of homes for the aged and other projects. There is an atmosphere of apprehension and uncertainty. Professionals fear they will be next to lose their jobs. Single parents fear they will lose subsidies for day care for their children. The elderly fear for the future of their Social Security benefits.

JEWISH Federations throughout the country are examining their priorities in the light of the new situation. They are trying to see top officials, in order to impress on them the effects of their policies. They are also turning to the communities, asking them to increase their contributions. This is already proving successful, with a 17 per cent rise in large donations reported for this year.

There may well be new tensions concerning priorities. The division of United Jewish Appeal funds between local needs on the one hand and Israel and overseas countries on the other, has often been the source of differences of opinion and even conflict in many communities. In the new circumstances, it is to be expected that voices will be heard demanding a higher proportion for local needs than was allotted previously.

Chalew quotes a Federation official who says, "We must raise more money. We must not be put in a position where we have to choose between Aunt Sophie in the nursing-home down the street and Cousin Aviva in a Youth Aliyah village in Israel." Moreover, there could be tensions among various Jewish charitable and service organizations competing for private donations.

The bright side to all this as seen by Chalew is that the Federations are eliminating inefficient and low-priority programmes; new sources of income are being sought, and fund-raising has received a new stimulus. In addition, the government and the private sector may cooperate more closely in delivering social services. The whole process is in its early stages and Chalew's bottom line is that as yet there is no bottom line.

YARMULKE CORNER. History, was recently made at Wembley, football stadium in London when a player appeared there for the first time in a soccer match wearing a yarmulke, reports the Jewish Chronicle. He was Saul Zelniker, playing for Oxford University against Cambridge in the varsity match.

And the other day in San Francisco, sitting in a popular delicatessen, I saw a "first": a transvestite, immaculately attired in his female clothes — and wearing his yarmulke.

BEN-GURION UNIVERSITY BOARD OF GOVERNORS CONVENES

A WEEK OF DEDICATIONS AND DELIBERATIONS

Beer Sheva, April 19... The twelfth annual meeting of the Board of Governors of the Ben-Gurion University of the Negev convenes here tomorrow with participants from Israel, Brazil, Canada, England, France, South Africa, Switzerland, and the United States. During a week of dedications and deliberations, the Board members will map out plans for the coming year. Beer Sheva will be the backdrop for the activities, which will span the University's campuses throughout the city and in Sede Boqer.

Canada House Student Dormitory

Some important events have already taken place, including the dedication of the Lily and Sidney Oelbaum Day Care Center in the Dalet neighborhood. This area was also the site of the dedication of the Canada House Student Dormitory, built with the munificent support of the Canadian Associates of Ben-Gurion University. H.E. Joseph Stanford, the Canadian Ambassador to Israel, was the Guest of Honor at the ceremony.

The Chinita and Conrad Abrahams-Curiel Medical Laboratory of the Faculty of Health Sciences, located at the Soroka Medical Center, was also dedicated yesterday. The laboratory will be an important addition to the facility.

A milestone in the University's academic development will be reached today upon the inauguration of the Frankel Family Chair in Energy and Chemical Engineering. The Minister of Energy, Mr. Yizhak Berman, will attend this auspicious ceremony.

The Board Meeting begins tomorrow morning with an assembly marking Martyrs and Heroes Remembrance Day. Some 200 University friends will attend the Opening Plenary Session. The festive presentation of Founders Wall Scrolls will follow, where Ben-Gurion University will pay tribute to its generous supporters.

Chinita and Conrad Abrahams-Curiel

William Frankel

Sir Leon Bagrit

The University's computer studies programs will be given a boost with the double-inauguration of the Chinita and Conrad Abrahams-Curiel Chair in Electronic Instrumentation and Microcomputers and the Sir Leon Bagrit Chair in Computer Aided Design and Scientific Research Development. General (Res.) Benjamin Peled will address the participants.

The degrees of Doctor of Philosophy and Honorary Doctor of Philosophy will be bestowed tomorrow evening. Dr. Zoltan Toman of Venezuela, Judge Shlomo Elkayam of Israel and the first mayor of Beer Sheva, the late David Tuviah, have been chosen as recipients of the prestigious Honorary Doctorate award. Knesset Speaker Menachem Savidor will be Guest of Honor at the proceedings, in which five graduates will also officially receive their Ph.D.s. An evening program with students will conclude the busy day.

Founders Wall

Activities on Wednesday begin with Committee Meetings which will concentrate on two major issues: long-term academic development programs, and the need for augmenting financial resources to meet the University's needs.

A new stage in the development of Ben-Gurion University's home in the heart of Beer Sheva will be reached on Wednesday afternoon. The unique ceremony will be the dedication of the Sir John and Lady Cohen University Swimming Pools and the Cornerstone Laying of the Jacqueline Ayrton Sports Hall. Present at the event will be M.K. Shimon Peres.

President Shlomo Gazit will guide the proceedings, which will adjourn to Sede Boqer on Thursday. A wreath will be laid at the graves of the University's namesake, David Ben-Gurion and his wife Paula, and a tour of the southernmost campus will take place.

Report on manpower supply till 1985 Share of low-skilled in labour market on downtrend

By CHARLES HOFFMAN
Jerusalem Post Reporter

The low-skilled, low-paying jobs in industries such as textiles will have to make way within a few years for more challenging, better paid jobs if the economy is to make efficient use of the manpower to be available then.

This conclusion was drawn by the head of the Manpower Planning Authority, David Katz, based on a report issued by the authority yesterday on the projected manpower supply for the years 1980-1985. The authority is part of the Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs.

The forecast showed that the share of members of the labour force with eight years schooling or less will drop from 28 per cent in 1980 to 24 per cent in 1985. Furthermore, the absolute size of this group will decline from 371,000 to 351,000 during this time.

The proportion of technically or academically trained manpower will rise from 27 per cent to about 30 per cent, with the rest being skilled or unskilled labour.

The overall growth rate of the labour force will decline, from 2.8

per cent a year during 1975-1980 to 2.2 per cent during 1980-1985, as proportionately fewer Jews as well as non-Jews enter the labour force. The labour force is expected to reach 1,467,000 people in 1985, slightly less than 90 per cent of them Jews.

The slower growth rate anticipated for the labour force is based on assumptions of a slower natural increase and on a net gain of 10,000 immigrants a year for 1982-1985, after deducting for projected emigration.

The proportion of women in the labour force will increase slightly, from 37 per cent in 1980 to 38 per cent in 1985, but women will account for 50 per cent of the overall net additions to the labour force during this period. Katz noted that this trend will require more flexible working hours and social services to accommodate the needs of working mothers.

About 75 per cent of the academically trained newcomers to the labour force will come from institutions of higher learning in Israel, with the fastest growing groups being teachers, lawyers and engineers.

TEL AVIV. — The equity market yesterday continued to surge ahead in response to a new wave of buying. The week's activities began on a positive note which exceeded most expectations. A full 16 issues were established as "buyers-only" and another 59 moved up by margins of more than 5%.

Trading volumes were in excess of $5470 million. The index-linked bond market showed little change. When prices

75 issues up 5 per cent or more

did change they tended to move higher by fractions of one per cent. Trading turnovers were under the $500m mark.

Bank shares moved higher. Maritime Bank 0.1 shares continued to be the most active. They were up by 6.6%. The 0.5 shares, on the other hand, were down by 4.1%, while the options fell by a full 6%.

Grave U.S. detour

ACCORDING to reports from Washington, the U.S. is planning to let the Moslem draft resolution on the Temple Mount incident pass in the Security Council today, and perhaps even vote for it. Israel's pleas for an American veto on the resolution have so far failed to meet with a favourable response.

This is a dangerous development. The purpose of the Moslem maneuver, spearheaded by Jordan, is twofold: First, to place the blame for what President Reagan himself has described as the act of a single deranged individual, on all Israel, making it appear that Alan Harry Goodman's crazed shooting spree at the Dome of the Rock last week was part of a deliberate Israeli war plan on the holy sites of Islam.

Secondly, it means to force the U.S. to approve a reiteration of a reference to Jerusalem as one of "the occupied Arab territories." The reference was originally inserted in a Security Council text two years ago, which President Carter later disavowed as a mistake on the part of the U.S. ambassador to the UN.

Israel is entitled to expect of the U.S. that it should not lend a helping hand to any such Arab-Moslem strategy.

The bid to indict all Israel for the Temple Mount incident is indeed, as Premier Begin has suggested, a blood libel. It emerges as a particularly vicious libel when set against the background of similar, and even worse, incidents, none of which has prompted the Security Council to sit in judgment over the power administering the holy site on which the offence took place: the assassination of Jordan's own King Abdullah at Al Aksa Mosque while Jordan ruled the Old City of Jerusalem, the recent murderous attack by Moslem fanatics on Mecca's Holy Mosque, and the still more recent attempt by a Moslem Turk on the life of Pope John Paul II in St. Peter's Square.

The difference presumably lies in the fact that Jerusalem, under Israel's rule, is regarded, in UN jurisprudence, as just one of "the occupied Arab territories." This proposition, however, has been rejected not only by Israel — and within Israel, even by most of those Israelis who thought the 1980 Jerusalem Law a needless provocation — but also by the U.S. itself.

True, Washington has not hesitated to question the legitimacy of many of Israel's unilateral moves in Jerusalem as reunified after the Six Day War. But Washington accepted the thesis that the eastern part of the city, occupied in that war, was nevertheless sui generis, and could not simply be assimilated into "the occupied Arab territories." This was recognized even by President Carter when he sought to correct, however belatedly, Ambassador McHenry's vote on March 1, 1980. President Reagan appeared to have adopted this view as his own.

Now Mr. Reagan apparently feels that he must somehow compensate the Arab and Moslem nations for America's sustained support of Israel over the past full year. The tragic incident on the Temple Mount thus becomes a convenient instrument to appease Arab and Moslem opinion.

Perhaps, however, the president and his aides should also weigh the effect this will have on Israel, for surely it will undo much of the goodwill shown by Mr. Reagan. If Washington's purpose is to suggest that it has differences with Israel over some of its policies — on Lebanon, on the peace with Egypt, on the Palestinians — then let it say so, even openly, and let the issues be thrashed out. But let it not wrap its politics with the red rag of defamation which is the flag the Security Council is being asked to fly.

Language of bullets

THE KILLING and wounding of Arabs in the territories has become almost routine. Hardly a day passes by without at least one or two of them, mostly young ones, being killed. The Israel public has become so inured to this, it seems no longer to pay attention.

To be sure, these are not simply Arabs but, for the most part, Arab demonstrators, incited to acts of violence. And the Israelis who kill them are, for the most part, members of the security forces whose duty it is to maintain law and order.

But the Arabs are by and large unarmed, except with rocks which they hurl and tyres which they set on fire, and they do not come organized in military formations. And the troops and the border guards who are supposed to shoot only in self-defence, and only into the air or at the demonstrators' feet, somehow manage to strike an assailant dead, and not with rubber bullets either.

An occasional inquiry is ordered of a soldier who is suspected of having shot out of line, and not at a demonstrator but at, say, a lone Arab woman. But rarely does this lead anywhere. The same is true of the occasional investigation of the West Bank vigilantes, the local Jewish settlers who tote their guns by permission, indeed at the behest, of the authorities.

Needless to say, the killings are not planned in advance, nor are they an end in themselves. They are merely the product of a policy which aims at suppressing the PLO, and alienating the people of the territories from it. But their practical result is just exactly the opposite. They add fuel to the PLO flames, and they widen the gulf between Israelis and Palestinians perhaps beyond any prospect of bridging.

Certainly it is strange, that after the Temple Mount incident, when Moslem religious and political extremism held the reins, there was no effort by government ministers to engage in direct dialogue and quiet conversations with West Bank and East Jerusalem leaders, including moderates. That was all left to Teddy Kolek and the Jerusalem Municipality. The government, through the army and security forces, spoke only with the language of force.

If there is any hope that the people of the territories might one day welcome the autonomy scheme under Israel's aegis, it can be realized only by a process of dialogue. All we are doing now is killing off that hope.

POSTSCRIPTS

THE ORT (Levinson) School in Kiryat Bialik has just produced a 131-page yearbook in Hebrew and Spanish, full of articles and poems, in honour of its five-year link with the ORT vocational high school in Santiago, Chile. After they were "matched up" by the Jewish Agency, the two schools — their pupils and staff — have corresponded regularly. In addition, the Chilean Jewish parents have sent 100 of their sons and daughters this year (during the Santiago summer, Kiryat Bialik's winter) to Israel. The youngsters stay as guests in homes of the local ORT children, and the entire programme is paid for by the parents themselves. There is very little aliyah from Chile, notes Yitzhak Mechrez, one of the volunteer parents, and the intermarriage rate is very high. Thus visits to Israel for two or three weeks, tours with Gadna and staying with an Israeli family can make a difference. He suggests that every community and school in Israel match up with disappearing Jewish communities in the Diaspora. The programme, he adds, has even helped some of the Kiryat Bialik children learn Spanish. J.S.

JUST in case you don't think the Falklands is a crisis, we're informed that passions were so aroused by the Argentinian seizure of the islands that British volunteer workers at Kibbutz Bror Hayil, near Ashkelon, recently "invaded" neighbouring Kibbutz Or Haner, which has a large number of Argentinians among its members, and plastered the settlement's notice board with the Union Jack and patriotic posters. Bror Hayil remains on guard against retaliatory action. S.R.

A MESSAGE FOR MUBARAK

The U.S. should make it clear to Egypt that continued aid will depend on continued Egyptian adherence to the peace process, writes ABRAHAM H. FOXMAN.

AS THE DATE draws nearer for Israel's final withdrawal from Sinai, many Israelis are questioning the wisdom of the move. They wonder, as they must, what Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak will do once he has all of Sinai in hand.

Americans should be wondering, too. Clearly, it is in the interest of the United States that Egypt and Israel remain at peace. Without Egypt, the likelihood that the other Arab states would launch a war against Israel, while not out of the question, is sharply diminished. The prevention of another Arab-Israeli conflict continues to be a major American goal in the region and Egyptian-Israeli peace is the vital factor towards the achievement of that goal.

Moreover, an Egypt and Israel not at war can still provide the best hope for strategic cooperation with the U.S. against the Soviets and their surrogates. While there is more to be accomplished in the area of strategic cooperation, it can only be built upon a foundation of peace.

Recognizing the inherent interest of the U.S. in continuing friendly Egyptian-Israeli relations, is there anything that can be done now to enhance the prospects?

The answer is "yes" and it is connected to the reasons for which Anwar Sadat made peace with Israel in the first place. Two stand out: to get back the Sinai and its oilfields, and, even more important, to build a U.S. "relationship" and all that that means in military, strategic, economic and diplomatic support.

Sadat's image of his country's future was closely tied to the American connection. He understood that he could not achieve American largesse — which requires the support of the American public, media, and government — without breaking from Egypt's past relationship to Israel.

NOW THAT the Sinai factor will soon be out of the equation, the key element in Egypt's decision-making process on relations with Israel will be how movement away from Israel would be received in the United States.

If Mubarak concludes that Prime Minister Menachem Begin and not Egypt would be blamed, that U.S. military and economic aid, now in the billions, would not be adversely affected, then he would be more likely to move in that direction.

On the other hand, if he understood that such a move would sharply affect U.S.-Egyptian relations, then he would be less likely to make it.

Recent articles suggesting that if Begin does not behave himself, Mubarak will act differently after April, is exactly the wrong kind of message to be sending the Egyptian president. This kind of message enables Mubarak to reach certain conclusions about a U.S. reaction, thereby giving him the feeling he is free to act.

The correct message — and, indeed, the most important thing the U.S. administration should do between now and April 25 — is to inform Mubarak that the U.S. is eager to continue its full diplomatic, military, and economic support of Egypt — but it must be predicated on continuing Egyptian peace and normalization with Israel.

That way, Mubarak can have no illusions about where Washington stands and he would then have the clearest incentive to continue the peace. Meanwhile, an increasingly edgy Israel, experiencing hostility from Lebanon and Syria, U.S. arms going to Saudi Arabia and possibly Jordan, a UN obsessed with anti-Israel activity, can at least feel reassured that its Sinai withdrawal was not just a trap from which it must find a way toward safety.

Finally, for the U.S., there will be the triumph of having solidified that part of the peace already achieved and having created a climate where other would-be moderates may step forward and move the region away from its self-destructive history of violence and hatred.

The U.S. must speak plainly with Egypt before April 25.

Gratuitous violence

JORDAN SCHER considers the make-up of the political assassin and how violence in a society affects the individual.

About 20 per cent of murderers are psychotic.

They may be depressed, mentally retarded, suffering brain damage, temporal or frontal lobe epilepsy (episodic dyscontrol syndrome), or even undergoing a pseudohomosexual panic — fear that they are homosexual. Genetic defects, an extra Y chromosome in males or an X in females, and hormonal imbalances have also been implicated in violent behaviour. Alcohol and drugs, such as amphetamines, may precipitate violence. The murderer or violent individual may be accident-prone and subject to many psychosomatic complaints.

Violent individuals often have sexual difficulties, including uncertainty about their sexual identification. Consequently, they become involved in macho behaviour and defending their honour. Their fantasy lives are filled with grandiose, completely unrealistic expectations, much daydreaming of violent acts and extravagant sexual exploits. There may be frequent mood swings, suicidal thoughts and great confusion about identity, about exactly who they are and their places in the world.

Most violence-prone people have a history of anti-social behaviour, a criminal record, or a history of mental disturbances and psychiatric diagnoses. They cannot manage their own lives.

Most of the messianic assassins are males, although more recently women have been getting into the act. Witness the Bar-Simantov tragedy, and many of the figures in the Bader-Meinhoff Gang and the Red Brigades. Thus the situation is changing as the result of societal shifts in the global village.

SINCE Allan Harry Goodman is an American immigrant to Israel, one must place him in perspective within the American context. Between 1960 and 1977, major violent crime in the U.S., such as murder, robbery, and aggravated assault, tripled, as did serious property crimes. Three Americans in 100 will be victims of violent crimes, and one home in 10 will be burglarized this year.

Murder, once considered a crime of passion, involving a love triangle, has become in almost two-thirds of the cases in the U.S. a crime in which the murderer is a stranger to his victim.

Criminal violence in the U.S. grew between 1960 and 1975 by 69 per cent, as the population of the average Israeli for war and sudden death make for a violence-prone society. And more violence is becoming a part of the domestic scene, as well as the political one. Little wonder that the Israelis are not notorious for public politeness in mundane matters. They haven't time for it.

It was also the era in which there was the abortive American youth revolution, and the massive youth involvement in drugs. The explosive increase is currently stabilizing and expected to decline in the next five years. Violent crime seems also to be stabilizing, and may decline in the '80s. But violence has always been a part of the American scene, as H. Rap Brown phrased it in the '60s: "Violence is as American as cherry pie."

Aaron Burr, Jesse James, Billy the Kid, Wyatt Earp, John Wilkes Booth, and Charles Manson have all become folk heroes. Television, movies have lauded and apotheosized violence. Contrary to the protestations of the media flak, chronic exposure not only is not cathartic, and does not discharge violence, but it actually enhances it in the viewer.

This is especially true if the viewer is a child, or someone easily influenced in this direction. Repeated exposure to violence on TV has been demonstrated to teach aggressive behaviour by imitation.

Intensive exposure increases emotional arousal and readiness for violence. It desensitizes one to the reality of violence; Vietnam in part was a TV event. Excessive TV violence reduces the threshold for violent acting out, and enforces the idea that aggression, or violence, is the way to resolve interpersonal issues.

In many ways, the American experience has been incorporated into the Israeli situation. Israel, too, was born in conflict, and has suffered from a surfeit of the same since before the founding of the state. Arab threats, internal political hostilities, international pressures, the chronic preparedness of the average Israeli for war and sudden death make for a violence-prone society. And more violence is becoming a part of the domestic scene, as well as the political one. Little wonder that the Israelis are not notorious for public politeness in mundane matters. They haven't time for it.

OBSERVING aggressiveness in others can yield a kind of overshoot, or more intensive aggression. Perhaps this phenomenon helped to produce the sadistic overkill of those engaged in perpetrating the Holocaust.

A few years ago, an American psychologist became relatively famous by teaching married couples to "fight constructively." This had seemed to have passed, doubtless due to the predictably increased mayhem encountered in the process. It was also for a long time a psychoanalytic dictum that the therapist should help the patient to "get out the aggression," as a means of liberating him from his inhibiting internally-directed aggressiveness. But there is very often an inertia to any form of behaviour that is consistently reinforced. And it must have been discovered that such a programme is often counterproductive.

This is, of course, what the aggression-prone individual is chronically doing. So it is not surprising that the end result may very well be a shooting-up of the Temple

Mount, or the gunning-down of a Sadat.

Aggressiveness is a normal response, but it can be obviously overdone, when there are alternative modes of behaviour which may deal with situations more efficiently. Violence also has a place in the repertoire of normal human beings. But gratuitous violence, uncalculated for and inappropriate, must always be the product of a sick or dishevelled mind.

We have learned much about the dimensions of this kind of violence. Maybe we will one day learn how to do more than understand gratuitous violence. Perhaps we will even come to anticipate those who might perpetrate it and so be able to head it off.
